

Medical Mediation

A guide for parents

mmf

Why mediation?

Sometimes families, patients and healthcare professionals disagree, for example:

- Communication between family members and the healthcare team may be difficult or have broken down.
- Families may want a treatment for their child that the healthcare professionals do not believe will help.
- Family members may have beliefs which prevent them from agreeing to a plan of medical care.
- A young person may have different views from their family about their medical care.

“Mediation made me understand the situation better..it made me more confident about the decision I wanted to make”

Mediation is:

- Confidential
- Voluntary
- Future-focused

These situations are difficult for everyone involved. Most of the time, they are resolved through careful discussion and allowing time to talk and think things through. But sometimes agreement cannot be reached and this is when mediation can help.

What is mediation?

Mediation is a confidential, voluntary process which gives those involved in a disagreement a chance to talk things through with the support of a trained and independent mediator.

The mediator will have separate discussions with all those involved. Once everyone is willing to proceed, the mediator will invite the parties to meet together to see if an overall agreement can be reached.

Mediators do not take sides or make decisions. Their role is to make sure that everyone has a chance to express their concerns and have their point of view heard.

How long does mediation last?

Mediation is a flexible process so the number and length of meetings will vary. Individual conversations will usually last no longer than one to two hours. A mediation meeting between all parties will usually take three to four hours.

Who are the mediators?

The Medical Mediation Foundation is an independent organisation which provides mediation services to the NHS and social care services. The mediators are independent of the healthcare organisation and are not involved in your child's care.

Is the service confidential?

Yes. Everything that is said during mediation is confidential. Only the terms of any agreement reached will be put in the medical notes.

The only times when a mediator will pass on what is said, is if:

- they believe there is a significant risk of harm to any person involved
- either side is breaking the law
- they are ordered to do so by a court
